Within politics but also within universities in Switzerland there is a controversial debate running, whether art schools should get the right to award doctorates or PhDs on their own. This in contrast to international standards. The international conference with distinguished exponents from international art schools and from the Zurich Ministry of Education will present and discuss fundamentals, best practices and political conclusions of research in the arts. Focused on some of today's crucial issues of artistic PhDs and organized in five sections the conference aims to advance the discussion in Switzerland about the necessity of a discrete right to award doctorates / PhDs.
